JEWISH OPERA IN AMSTERDAM.

We notice as a curiosity that towards the latter end of the last century there existed at Amsterdam an amateur company of performers, men and women, all of them Jews, who represented all kinds of German and French operas, and who excelled in their art to an extraordinary degree. Indeed, so great was their fame that they were invited, as we shall see further on, to play before royalty. They also enjoyed public respect to a very high degree, as only ladies and gentlemen of respectability were admitted. "Art, like nature," says the New Yorker Staats Zeitung which gives a very lengthy account of this band, "has her anomalies." Who would ever have dreamed that the Jews, who in the previous century were not supposed to possess the taste, much less the talent, should even at that period be the pioneers of music, the ennoblers of the art of singing in Europe, and that, too, in a city where only full weighed Ducats and Harlem Tulip bulbs were held in most esteem. Yet such is a fact, and that in the city of Amsterdam, that Babylon of commerce, near the close of the 18th century, and while Italian music held the first position in Germany.

The following were the origin of the band.
"Several young persons of both sexes, who had successfully appeared at different concerts in the city, and acquired a certain musical reputation, formed themselves into a society for the purpose of offering their numerous patrons an operatic entertainment, as a celebration of the festival of Purim. For this purpose, they united to their numbers the best musicians of the city, of the same faith as themselves, selected and bought the then celebrated opera, "Le Deserteur," by Mon-signy, engaged an appropriate hall, and rehearsed together very carefully under the leadership of an experienced connoisseur, called Haageuer.
The hall it is true, was small and shabby; it certainly hurt the feelings of the refined lords and haughty diamond-decked ladies, which distinguished personages occupied leather covered chairs in the first rows, and looked down with contempt upon the small shopkeepers and clerks, who contented themselves with wooden benches in the rear of the elike.

"The decorations, likewise, appeared to have seen much service and rough treatment; but for the acting and singing seemed to please all; for the lords from time to time kept bowing their heads as acknowledgment of their approbation, this being their usual style of applause. What was even more demonstrative and significant, they cordially exerted themselves to smile, as the first soprano and leading character of the piece, Miss Louise Schmitzler, a tall figure, with sharp oriental features, made her entree and uttered the first few notes of her part. The beautiful blonde, Miss Marcande, and charming Miss Fratric, with her little retrovisse Dutch nose, as though made expressly for the character of chambermaid and peasant girl, likewise found favor in the eyes of these lords of nobility. The first tenor Mr. Boas, found no less favor with the opposite sex; the round enamelled faces beamed with imitable delight, whenever the notes that "sweet Jewish voice" were heard, and many a youthful patrician could not help admitting that the somewhat slender figure of the artist looked to its very best advantage.
The first basso, Mr. Abraham Selic, by his powerful, full-toned voice as well as by his martial bearing, so impressed the audience in his favor, that the rather corpulent Myneer Swanmerdam, an Amsterdam Rothschild, exclaimed quite loudly, that this man's voice was as impressive as a voice from the pulpit.
The second basso, Mr. Solomon Andreas, with the two baritone, Messrs. Jacob Desau and Hoofse, were likewise very successful in their several roles. In short, the numerous patrons of the entertainment declared themselves delighted, and the success of the undertaking became an accomplished fact; so much so, that the opera had to be repeated no less than twenty-two evenings consecutively."

The attempt was too successful not to be repeated. Accordingly, Purim after Purim some fine opera was performed. Practice makes the master; and so it was with the company.
Its fame grew. At last a certain senator, a man fully appreciating the beauties of the art of music fully experienced, and a strictly orthodox member of the Jewish religion undertook the whole management of the theater instead of former directors, and to his disinterested and intelligent management the society owed its great progress, success, and reputation. He well understood how to raise the society by degrees to a regular theatrical standing, and to change its former dilettante proclivities, to that of artists of the highest order. The members of the Purim Society thus began to assume those appointed parts best suited to their talents, and to systematise both their studies and their rehearsals. It was under this direction that the new season of 1787, opened with the opera of "Nina," which had been rehearsed with the greatest care and the utmost diligence.
The extraordinary success which attended the representation of that opera, proved unmistakeably the value of the leading spirit. The applause which the artists won, exceeded any ever before known at Amsterdam at like performances.

The respectable phlegmatic merchants, became suspiciously excited, applauded earnestly, heartily, loudly; and the gentler sex usually so undemonstrative, worked their delicate white hands until they actually smarted. The Purim Society had worked wonders; the public of Amsterdam were seized with a sort of wild enthusiasm. The opera of "Nina" by Delaric made the fortune of the Jewish theater. Whenever it was announced on the bills, before noon of that day, there was not a seat to be had in the house, and, in the evening, all the available standing room was made good use of.

The highest pinnacle of the society's fame, was, however, reached in 1794. The Judge and Magistrate of Amsterdam, Myneer Harzee, one of the wealthiest citizens, possessed a beautiful, charming villa, with extensive grounds, situated about eight hours' ride from Amsterdam, in the village of Alsen, on the Rhine. The Princess of Orange, a great admirer of nature, usually honored this beautiful spot with her presence during the summer months.

In the month of May, of the year 1794, the Princess had signified her intention to the worthy possessor of this charming spot, to be permitted to celebrate her coming birthday at his lovely villa. The proud citizen felt not a little flattered by the honor thus tendered him, and for which he made the greatest preparations.
He desired to show the Court what an Amsterdam magistrate was able to do on such an occasion. In order to offer his royal guest an extraordinary surprise, he invited the members of the Jewish opera troupe to be present. Early on the beautiful morning of the festive day the senators elegantly fitted up pleasure yacht appeared on board all the members of the troupe, together with the orchestra, and transported them to their place of destination. Arrived there, they found everything that could contribute to the success of one of their operatic performances, their personal comforts likewise carefully, and even opportunity provided for a hurried, though undisturbed rehearsal. Many members of the royal household, the whole corps of "Generals" officers and staff, and the leading citizens of Amsterdam, had arrived and paid their respects to the Princess, who had made her appearance a few hours previous.

And having described the sumptuousness and splendor of the fête given in honor of the Princess by the wealthy patrician, and which was especially displayed in a walk through the grounds of the country-house, our cotemporary continues: "The Princess having entered the passage way, was greeted by a flourish of trumpets. The invisible orchestra then struck up the national air of 'William of Nassau,' and as soon as the audience were seated, began the overture to the opera of the 'Beautiful Maid of the Mill' (Schöne Mullerin). The curtain rose, and Princesses' favorite opera was then given to her utmost satisfaction. The royal lady could not sufficiently thank her worthy host for this unexpected pleasure. After the performance, she insisted upon each member of the opera troupe being presented to her, made some happy remark to each and every one of them, and what had never been heard of before in the annals of Amsterdam etiquette, invited them one and all to the grand ball which was to terminate the evening. Each one of the male singers had the honor of dancing a minuet with the Princess. And the females of the troupe could not complain of the attentions innumerable of the many generals and officers present.
After participating in one of the choicest suppers, displayed in the orangerie, the Jewish artists, covered with honors and loaded with presents, returned to the city upon the same vessel that conveyed them thither in the morning.

That day, the Purim Society was in the zenith of its career. The society increased the number of its members, in the choice of which, as heretofore, the greatest scrutiny was exercised as regarded their talents and moral standing in the community. A new tenor, by the name of Nathan Van Kleef, owing to his fine voice, particularly distinguished himself about this time in minor parts, and a new soprano, Miss Pipie Polack, displayed great hope of success in the soubrette line. The choruses were likewise proportionately and materially increased, so much so, that the following winter, the society was enabled to place on the stage the celebrated and most effective opera of "Paul and Virginia" (music by Kreutzer, composed in 1791; note by translation), which was performed with the greatest elate and success. And now for the first time the society made a step in advance, and began introducing recitative parts into their operatic performances.
"From this period all traces of this wonderful undertaking disappear. It is possible that the approaching stormy times, like with numerous artistic associations, brought this society to an end. It had unostentatiously entered into existence, its members had quietly, and with commendable discretion, improved themselves in their art, and in the same unostentatious manner as it began its existence, so did it end.
In its latter years, the repertoire of the society comprised more than fifty different operas, consisting of the best works of the German, French and Italian schools. The fact that all the members of the Purim Society were unmarried, is set forth in an article in the constitution governing the troupe; it appears as though the artists feared to prejudice their in the Consistorial school and be there brought up in the religion of his parents. It was moreover decided that the daughters should remain under the guardianship of the mother.

It is probable, adds Figaro, that the matter will not remain in this condition, and that the decision will be carried to a court of appeal. In fact there is no doubt but that the real contest is, though carried on under the parents' names, a struggle between the national Polish committee and the Jewish Consistory.

Silver Ware for bridal and other presents, can be had of J. W. Tucker & Co., better and for one-third less than any other establishment in the city. Watches, Chains, Diamonds, Jewelry and other goods at the same rates.

THE CASE OF MOSES ROSENTHAL.

A very peculiar case has lately been brought before the French law courts. It is rare that the intervention of a public judicial tribunal is appealed to for the purpose of protecting a Jewish child, in the exercise of its paternal religion, against the opinions of its own father.
In this instance, however, this has really occured. The circumstances are so peculiar that we think they cannot fail to interest our readers.
We must premise, however, that if the conclusions of the Figaro be well founded as to the real struggle being between the Polish Committee and the Jewish Consistory, it should be remembered that, wholly apart from the religious question, the latter—the Jewish Consistory—is entirely in the right; for it is a part of its recognized duty to protect a Jewish child in its adherence to its religion; whereas it can be no part of the duty of a political body such as the Polish Committee, to interfere in a religious question. The freedom of conscience, which Poland herself could desire, and which may one day be a solid question for that unfortunate country, should be respected by herself, if she would have it regarded by others.

We translate from the Figaro (a well known Paris newspaper) the following account: "The Figaro states that a boy named Moses Rosenthal, has lately attracted great attention, and is in a fair way of becoming as famous as young Mortara. The maternal grandfather of this child Rosenthal was Yelowski, chief Rabbi of Poland, whose daughter Noemi, his father married in 1851, when he (the father) was only fourteen years old, and the bride scarcely sixteen. They were married at so early an age because it was the only mode by which Rosenthal could escape from the Russian conscription.
When eighteen years old, he was the father of two children. In 1860 there were six children, the offspring of this marriage.

The Polish insurrection broke out in 1863, and Rosenthal took part in it; and when Poland was conquered, he, fearing to be caught by the Russian authorities, fled from his country, leaving behind him his wife and young children.
Rosenthal fled to France, and dear to all Polish hearts. But he had a proud spirit, and though misery and illness overtook him, he refused to receive relief from the French Government. His greatest misfortune, however—worse to him than all his privations—was that his family blamed him for taking part in the Polish insurrection. His father being a chief rabbi and cabalist, affirmed that a Jew had no fatherland. Yelowski considered religious interests before political ones; whereas Rosenthal, on the contrary only thought of his suffering fatherland and his oppressed nationality.
This was the origin of the differences which have given rise to the present law suit. Thus the public troubles of a country affect the happiness of individuals, and civil war attacks the privacy of the home.

Madame Rosenthal finding herself destitute, came to France with her six children from the heart of Poland. But for their miserable condition of indigence, the husband and wife, thus united in a foreign land, would, no doubt, have met each other with terms of mutual love and affection, were it not that, unfortunately, Rosenthal, overwhelmed with penury and illness, could do nothing for his family, and at last bowed his pride and accepted assistance from France. The parents divided the children among them. The eldest, Moses, remained with his father, who placed him at the Polish school at Baugnolles, the principal of the school certifying that he received children of all religious denominations, and that all religious opinions were respected. It appeared, however, that the boy when at the school had no alternative but to content himself with dry bread or to eat meat prepared by Christian hands, that is to say contrary to the ordinances of the Talmud (sic). When the chief rabbi heard this piece of news he rushed off to France and insisted that the child should be taken away from the Polish school. The father refused, whereupon the boy was removed and kept by his mother, who placed him at the Consistorial school.

From this arose the present suit, in which the father and the mother both lay claim to the child, one in the name of his nationality, the other in the name of his faith.

The chief rabbi of Poland induced persons of high position to move in the matter. First chief rabbi Isidor, of the Paris Consistory, and then Mr. Nathaniel de Rothschild, the barrister, whose kind heart was touched with a spectacle of distress to be relieved. This young rabbi at first intended to undertake the case, but fearing that the religious question might shade the freedom of conscience for an advocate, he confided it to the care of Mr. Gustave Chaix d'Est Ange.

Want of space precludes us from inserting an admirable letter written by the Polish chief rabbi, imploring his son-in-law not to afflict him in his old age. This is a noble letter in which high-minded feelings are expressed in the simplicity of biblical language.

The first legal point to be considered was whether this was a case of abduction, and then whether the father had the right to claim his son. These questions were argued by Lassis.
The court adopted the opinions expressed by Mr. Lepelletier, the imperial solicitor general, and being guided by their view of the interests of the boy solely, decided that he should remain in the Consistorial school and be there brought up in the religion of his parents. It was more-
under the guardianship of the mother.

will not remain in this condition, and that the
is, though carried on under the parents' names,
a struggle between the national Polish committee and the Jewish Consistory.

THE TWO GREAT LIGHTS.

"Let there be two great lights in the firmament to separate day from night."—Genesis i. 5.
The earth, rulers of ever-changing time, guardians of day and night!"

He spoke, and it was.
And, in all his glory and majesty, up rose the sun. A crown of many colors adorned his head; jewels, whose effulgence no mortal eye could look upon, decked him, and sent forth their gleaming rays on all creation. Smilingly and lovingly he looked down on the beauteous earth, gave life and fragrance to every herb, scent and beauty to every flower, vigor and health to the Creator's crowning work, man.

But the moon looked on with an eye of jealousy, and envy darkened her beauty, as she asked, "Why should there be two royal personages on one throne? why should I have only the second rank in this grand creation?"

And suddenly her beautiful light disappeared, chased away by the spirit of jealousy. Far away on the wings of wind it flew, till it reached the great multitude of stars, and these it turned into glittering atoms in the vast vault of heaven.

And in darkness and misery the moon stood before the throne of the Almighty, and cried, "Mercy, mercy, oh Father, for I have sinned." Alas! too late, the fiat of God had gone forth.

"Unhappy one!" said the Divine voice, looking down with pity on the darkened creation, "because thou hast envied the beauty and magnificence with which it has pleased thy Creator to adorn thy brother, the sun, know that henceforth from him alone shall thy brightness be borrowed; and when it pleases thy Maker to show His omnipotent power, thou shalt even be again plunged into darkness. But weep not, victim of envy. The King of mercy has forgiven thee! Thou, too, in thy beauty shalt be Queen. The sight of thee shall refresh the weary, and inspire hope in the failing heart."

And behold, ere yet the voice Divine had ceased uttering these words of comfort, a sweet and peaceful light illuminated the moon—a tranquil beauty which is hers for evermore.

Queen of the night, leader of the hosts of stars, silently and peacefully she fulfills her destiny, obedient to the will of her Creator.

THE CIRCULATION OF THE LONDON PRESS.— The Times is believed to still circulate about sixty thousand copies daily, selling them to the trade at twopenny-halfpenny each. The Daily Telegraph announces in blue letters, five feet long, on the wall, "that it has the largest circulation in the world." The actual sale is from one hundred and twenty thousand to one hundred and forty thousand daily. The Standard, which advertises each week above its leading article, its average daily circulation during the previous week, shows a total of about one hundred and twenty thousand, but this includes the Evening Standard and the Morning Herald, and of these totals a vast number are returned or their hands. The numbers given are the numbers printed, which is a very different thing from the numbers sold. The Daily News, which started at a penny a short time since, and which has not got all its machinery in perfect gear, has sold about 50,000 each day, and its proprietors are sanguine that it will be at the head before many months have passed. Morning and Evening Star sell together about 25, 000 daily. The Morning Post (high priced) scarcely reaches 4,000 a day; the Morning Advertiser, 5,000; the Express, evening paper, (the property of the Daily News), is about 15,000; the Pall Mall Gazette, 12,000, and the Globe, 5,000. There is no really well-written weekly paper in London selling at a penny.
All the papers of that price are of an inferior character and are sold exclusively among the artisans and mechanics. They reach, however, large numbers in the amount of their sales.
Papers which you have never heard of in this country sell some 200,000 weekly. The papers which are read by the ruling classes (for the want of a better phrase) are fivepence or sixpence each. Of the number, the richest is the Saturday Review. I doubt, however, if the Saturday Review ever reached a sale of 10, 000 copies. The Spectator averages probably 7,000.

SWITZERLAND.—A most extraordinary slave trade seems to be going on at this moment in Switzerland. It appears that certain "noble" families in Austria, chiefly in Hungary and Croatia, who cannot afford to keep a French governess, have for some time been in the habit of procuring small children from 8 to 12 years of age from the French cantons (Fribourg, Neuchâtel, etc.). These, while serving as play mates for the "high well-born" children teach them their French, such as it is. In many cases however, the small whipping boys or girls, left utterly unprotected and helpless in their owners' hands are brutally ill-treated, and in the end driven out of doors to starve on the roadside. The matter has become so flagrant that the Government has had to take notice of it. A case which occurred quite recently has, indeed, caused an official remonstrance and an exchange of notes between Austria and Switzerland. A certain noble in Warasdin had bought a little slave girl for his family, and after a time turned her out with a whole florin "to go to Vienna with." The child, 10 years of age, was picked up at the roadside in a melancholy condition, and bodily forwarded to the Swiss Charge d'Affaires, Techni, in Vienna. The Federal Council are about to take energetic steps for the suppression of this disgraceful abuse.

A French physician was one day consulted by a person who was a prey to the most gloomy fits of melancholy. He advised his patient to mingle in scenes of gaiety, and especially the Italian theatre where Carlini was nightly exciting the mirth of the audience. "If," said the physician, "Carlini does not dispel your gloomy fit, your case must be indeed hopeless." Alas! sir," replied the patient, "I am Carlini, and while I divert all Paris with mirth, and make them almost die with laughter, I myself am dying with melancholy and chagrin."

SOBER FACTS FOR THINKING PEOPLE.—Year after year, for the eighth of a century, the Press of the country has chronicled the beneficial effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Editors, authors, physicians, merchants, officers of the army and navy, chemists, counselors, ministers of the gospel, in short, a great cloud of witnesses of every profession, trade and calling, have testified to its efficiency as a tonic and regulating medicine. The names and statements of these witnesses have been published in the public prints. Many of them are well known to the whole public. Their testimony has never been challenged or impugned. Upon evidence for less weighty men were acquitted and condemned by conscientious juries. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is not, however, upon trial. It has been tried and pronounced on the authority of those whose lives and health it has preserved, a pure, harmless, and eminently salutary preparation. Attempts have been made to rival it: They have failed. Can it be necessary to say why they have failed? Ask the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, and nervous subjects who have experienced its effects, what they think of it. Ask them and be guided solely by what they say. Sold everywhere.

DR. VON EISENBERG.—We call the attention of the public to Dr. Von Eisenberg, an eminent physician who has lately arrived from the East. This gentleman cannot remain long in our midst, as his professional engagements will soon call him away from here. It is therefore highly important to those who are themselves suffering or who have friends troubled with the diseases of the ear, eye, catarrh, bronchial and pulmonary complaints, all of which are cured within a very short time by the celebrated apparatus called the Aesthetico-Neura-logicon, invented by Dr. Eisenberg, which he invites all medical professors to examine and witness its operation and effect. Thousands have been cured by this process, his long experience and successful practice enable him to restore the invalid perfect health, very often by a slight application, as can be easily seen and heard by the many he has cured. None should fail who are suffering from these various al-ments, to go to his consulting rooms at No 331 Kearney street.

ARRIVED FROM PARIS.—One of the most enterprising firms of this city is S. Figel, No.
3 Montgomery street. He is determined to surpass anything in this city in manufacturing boys' suits. He has, at a great expense, engaged the services of a Parisian cutter, who brought with him all the latest styles from Paris. It is a well known fact that the work done at this establishment is far superior to any other house in this city. The reputation of this firm is sufficiently established, and does not need any more recommendations from us. Examine his stock, and you will surely purchase.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Messrs. Buckingham & Hecht make a splendid display of California made boots and shoes at the Fair, made at their manufactory, 417 Battery street. No imported goods can compare with theirs in point of workmanship and durability.

MARINE INSURANCE.—The attention of shippers is called to the fact that the Occidental Insurance Co., S. W. corner of Montgomery and California streets, have added Marine Insurance to their present business, and are now ready to issue policies on cargoes, freights, treasures, etc.

PRODUCE AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS.— We take pleasure in recommending to our merchants in the interior, Messrs. Pearson & Starr, who have established themselves as Produce Commission Merchants, at No. 318 Front street.

HATS! HATS!—The new fall style of hats are now ready at B. F. Mead & Co.'s, 309 Montgomery street. Give them a call.

WHAT MORE CAN A MAN WANT?—The "Splendid" invigorates, gives health, appetite and all that makes life a blessing. It is a tonic that everybody recommends. At wholesale by Wertheimer & Waterman, 219 Commercial street, San Francisco.

SMUGGLING LACE.—Ladies of rank were stopped in their chairs in Fleet-street or Covent-garden, London, and relieved by officers of the Customs of French lace to which they could not show a satisfactory title. Even ladies when walking, had their mittens cut off their hands, if supposed of French manufacture; and a poor woman was stopped with a quatern lot in her hands, which, when examined, contained £200 worth of lace inside the crust. In 1767, an officer of the Customs seized £400 worth of Flanders lace, artfully concealed in the hollow of a ship's buoy. Even his Grace the Duke of Devonshire was, after death, poked into at Dover with a stick, to the disgust of his servants, to make sure that he was real. Forty years, indeed, before that the body of a deceased clergyman was found to have been replaced by a bulk of Flanders lace of immense value. The smugglers had cut away the trunk from the head and hands and feet, and removed it; and the discovery of this trick caused the ignominious treatment of the Duke of Devonshire. Nevertheless the High Sheriff of Westminster ran comfortably £6 000 worth of lace in the coffin of Bishop Atterbury, who died in Paris, when he was brought over, counting, probably, on a dead bishop inspiring more awe than a deceased duke.—Quarterly Review.

ITALY.—Count Menabrea, Minister of Foreign Affairs, having been solicited by the Alliance to interpose on behalf of the Jews of Tetuan, who, as known, were not sufficiently protected by the authorities against the acts of violence of certain robbers, replied that immediately oncoming acquainted with these crimes he had given orders to the Italian agent in Morocco to interfere in behalf of the Jews, and that he had received the promise of the Moroccan Government that the perpetrators of these atrocious would be duly punished and efficient protection granted to the sufferers.—Educators Israelitic.

THE HEBREW.

From Good Words.

THE PRAYING MACHINE.

(CONCLUSION.)

In the Paranthas cave at Ellora there is a figure, of which I quote the following description from Murray's Handbook:—"The Lord of Purity is the name of the Jain deity, and it is here given to an image, about ten feet high, of a man in a sitting posture, with the hands in the lap laid one with the other, the fingers extended, and the head is canopied by a seven-headed serpent, whose folds, doubled behind the image, serve it as a prop. From the centre of the seat of the image half projects a wheel, above which an astronomical table is carved." The astronomical table here is an additional proof of the correctness of the meaning we have attached to the symbol under consideration.

The wheels of Ezekiel have always been rather a dark subject to scriptural exponents, but here seems something like a little light upon it. The minute description of the appearance and movements of the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel" (Gilgal)—show that they had a deep religious significance, which may be the more readily understood in view of the facts now laid before the reader. In Daniel there is the same description of the divine seat: "His throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire." (Dan. vii. 9.)

The movements of the sun, moon, and stars, have always been looked up to with religious feelings; the visible heaven and its movements have in all times impressed the mind of man. That the heavenly bodies had an appointment, in relation to religion, is declared in the first chapter of Genesis; and all through the Book this appointment is recognized. Job appeals to these visible emblems of God's glory and greatness. The emphatic language of the 19th Psalm has already been quoted. In the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticals, chap. xlii., we read, "The sun, when it appeareth, declaring at his rising a marvellous instrument, the work of the Most High;" and the moon is described as—"The beauty of heaven, the glory of the stars, an ornament giving light in the highest places of the Lord. At the commandment of the Holy One they will stand in their order, and never faint in their watches." In Revelation, a woman is to appear "clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars" (xii. 1.) By the ancients these celestial lights were called "those awful witnesses;" and Virgil says, "The sun reveals the secret of the sky." These powers and functions are all in virtue of the first decree, when they were made to revolve in the blue vault of the great temple. To the eyes of mortals, the sun, moon, and stars seem in heaven, and their movements have always been accepted as indications of the Will of Him who dwells in heaven. The revolutions of these heavenly bodies were expressed in many symbolical ways, and one of the most ancient has been the Wheel. It was represented either in the hand of the deity, or placed beside him as an emblem. A moveable wheel, such as we find in Tibet at the present day, was also used in the temples of other countries, as the following quotation will show:—"They signified also by Symbols, as the Wheel that is turned in the temples of their gods, which is derived from the Egyptians. The celebrated Ozar of Juggernath seems also to have been originally founded upon similar symbolism. The frantic votaries who travel from all parts of India to this shrine have lost all idea of its meaning. The ear may be described as a throne upon wheels. It is formed in imitation of a temple, constructed of wood and cloth, with a seat upon which the idol is placed. At the yearly ceremony of the Rath-Jatra, the car is pulled a certain distance with Juggernath upon it and back again to the temple. It is now understood that this has a reference to the movements of the heavenly bodies. It is when this ceremony is being performed that the Hindu believes he can attain instant emancipation by throwing himself under these sacred and symbolical wheels. The ceremony of Rath-Jatra is not confined to Juggernath; it is common all over Southern India. In every case a rath, or car, is kept for the purpose, and they are always elaborately ornamented with carving and paintings.

It has been already pointed out that the shrines of the Buddhists in India were circular buildings, and that the worship consisted in going round in the course of the sun. We find the same formula holds good at the principal shrine of Mahomedanism. One of the most important ceremonies which the Haji has to perform in his pilgrimage to Mecca is the circumambulation of the Caaba. This he does as the preliminary to kissing the celebrated black stone, which is the essential point of his journey. "This stone is built into the corner of the Caaba; is, in fact, made the corner-stone. It is believed to have come from heaven, and the follower of the prophet always turns to it in his prayers. In this he only follows the practice of the Jew, who, if possible, prays with his face toward Jerusalem.

It will be found that these ideas connected with the symbolism of the wheel have penetrated to the west as well as to the east. There was a Scandinavian deity called "the Seater," supposed to be the same as Saturn. He is represented standing on a fish, with a wheel held up in one hand, and a vessel full of flowers in the other. This clearly indicates that the wheel represents the revolving seasons, which come round bringing with them the flowers and fruits of the earth. In a curious old work called Vorstigan's "Restitution of Decayed Intelligence," there is a representation of the Seater as the Saxon god of Saturday. In the same work there is a drawing of the Saxon idol of the sun, or presiding deity of Sunday, who is also represented with a wheel darting from its outer circumference rays of fire or light. The Deisul, "going by the course of the sun," has been already noticed. It is chiefly of Druidical origin, indicating that the Druids had the same ideas on this matter as their Saxon and Scandinavian brethren.

The etymology of the word Stonenenge is curiously suggestive of a connection with this subject. It is said to be from Stone-kinge. Antiquarians are agreed that it was a temple dedicated to the sun, Apollo Belenus, or the Celtic Baal. It is a circular temple, and the word kinge implies the idea of turning. If the most important Druidical temple in Great Britain be thus constructed, and this derivation of its name be correct, may we not conclude that all the stone circles erected by the Druids had a similar symbolism connected with them, and that "going by the course of the sun" round these shrines was one of the ceremonies practised? And its importance can be estimated from the fact that a remnant of the custom still prevails in the Highlands of Scotland. This ceremony is practised at the New Year—in fact, at the beginning of the yearly revolution of the sun. The old word for this time of year was Yule, which became the word for Christmas after the Druidical faith had disappeared; and the etymology of the word will indicate the ideas which at one time belonged to it. The following quotation is from M. Count de Gebelin, who derives Yule from Jol, which he says is "pronounced biol, jul, giul, hwel, wheel, wial, vol, etc. It is an original word, importing a general idea of the revolution, or of a wheel. Jul, jom, in Arabic, expresses the first day of the year; that is, the day of revolution, or of return. Giulous in Persian signifies anniversary: it is so applied in respect to the kings' coronations. Hul in Danish and Swedish signifies rotation: in Flemish it is wial, in English wheel. With Germans the verb well-en signifies to turn; wäl implies waves, because continually coming and going. It is our (i.e. French) word houle, from whence also the Latin volvo, etc."

This identity of ideas cannot be the result of accident. It is not the mere resemblance of words, but the similarity of the symbolism by which the motions of the heavenly orbs, as the most wonderful of all natural phenomena, were limited by religious ceremonies, and by the construction of temples. Even our word church, or kirk, is derived from cirque and circle. And it may be worth noting that cardinal, one of the highest dignitaries in the Romish church, is a word derived from carlo, a hinge. It must be evident that to do our subject full justice would require very minute knowledge of etymology, ethnology, and other modern sciences; but enough is here given to make it clear that the Aryan race, or Scythian race, or the descendants of Shaphet, or whatever name may be assumed to express this particular family of man, when they spread over the globe, have carried with them the same notions to the west which they imported in their emigrations to the far east. Amongst the ideas thus carried, the Wheel as a symbol of the heavens is one of the most important and the most ancient. Traces of the idea can be discovered in various parts of the world, but the only complete illustration of it now remaining as a religious ceremony is to be found in the Himalayas and the out-of-the-way regions of Mongolia. Its continuance in these localities is easily explained; the climate and the soil is such that conquerors, either temporal or spiritual, were not tempted in that direction, and so primitive ideas have been allowed to remain very much in their earliest conditions. The Grand Lama of Tibet is a most remarkable illustration of this. He is a relic of that very ancient time when king and priest were centered in one man, under the theocratic form of government. The customs of the earliest ages are still to be found in this remote region, along with the Wheel of Buddha. This wheel can be traced back in the almost obliterated coins of old Scythian kings; farther back still in the writings of Daniel and Ezekiel, and even to the Creation—where, at the beginning, the sun, moon, and stars were appointed by their motions "to divide the day from the night," and to be, "for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years." The Buddhist priest, who still preserves this primitive practice, declares himself to be the teacher of the "way," and his name of Lama is derived from lam, the word still used in the language of Tibet to express the "path." From this brief account it will be seen, that whatever the praying machine of the ignorant idolater may be in the present day—that although it may have become, like many another ceremony, a mere dead mummy, whose bandages and wrappings envelop only that which is lifeless and useless since the soul has departed, yet as the mummy once had life, so had the wheel. In its original significance it was of the highest meaning—symbolic, indeed, if the foregoing observations are correct in their interpretation, of heaven, and the will and the way of God.

MAHOMET.—As he assumed the character of a prophet, one is naturally led to compare him with the mighty spiritual leaders of the chosen people of his own Semitic race, whose majesty Michael Angelo has fully been able to interpret; with Moses, with Elijah, with Isaiah, and with Ezekiel; yet the Arabian is but a sorry and barbarous counterfeit of these great types of humanity. One chapter of Hosea or Amos contains more grandeur of soul and more literary value than the whole Koran. Thus, in his highest flights, Mahomet never rises above the dignity of a coarse and ignorant imitation of a Hebrew prophet; while in his lowest abasement, as in the scene of the massacre of the Coraites, for example, he looms in history through the sanguinary darkness of a king of Dahomey or Ashantee. As the founder of a religion, it would be blasphemy to name him in the same breath with one of whom he presumed to declare himself a rival, of whose mission and incarnation he could appreciate neither the beauty, the spotlessness, nor the truth. But if we compare Mahomet with another founder of religion, Bouddha, Bouddha appears, in his doctrine of self-abnegation and in his spiritual conception of human nature, and the destinies of man, to stand as much above Mahomet as Mahomet does above the founder of American Mormonism. As in Mahomet's moral conduct of life, so in all his religious conceptions, there is a coarseness and grossness suited only to the semi-barbarous nations who remained faithful to his creed. The distinguishing mark, however, of Mahomet's whole life and character, is a savage incongruity; he was a strange mixture of barbarity and gentleness, of severity and licentiousness, of ignorance and elevation of character, of credulity of astuteness, of ambition and simplicity of life, of religious conviction and low imposture; but that which made him trait of his character, and that which made him indeed a great man, was an invincible belief in himself, in the ever present protection and favor of God, and in the density of the religion he was to found. The indissoluble tenacity of his belief, in spite of the tremendous difficulties which beset his career, forms the real grandeur of his character.—Renan.

GERMANY.—The Jewish hospital of Berlin is a magnificent building well administered. It is two stories high, and contains sixteen large rooms and twelve smaller ones. Into the latter are admitted paying patients, and the income derived from these is appropriated for the use of the poor sick. Attached to the hospital are a beautiful synagogue and very spacious grounds beautifully laid out. In these the convalescents take exercise in summer. In winter there is set apart for them a number of corridors, which are heated. The hospital is attended by eminent surgeons and physicians of the Jewish faith. It is well known that some of the most distinguished medical men in the capital of Prussia are of the Jewish faith.

TURKEY.—A new Jewish school has been established at Consaground, on the Bosphorus. It cost about £1200 towards which Baron Lionel de Rothschild contributed £150, and Count Camondo, of Constantinople, £200. The Sultan has decorated the Chief Rabbi Haim Moise, of the island of Candia, with the insignia of the Order of Medjidie, 3rd class.

II.

Es war an einem Freitag spät Nachmittags, als ich auf der Rückreise einer Wandertour mit meines Verpfändens, das ich dem Barchfeld'schen Wirth gegeben, erinnere, von dem letzten Ausruhequartier von der Chaussee frühwärtig einbog, um zu guter Zeit an Ort und Stelle zu sein. Ich fand, als ich nach anderthalb stündiger Wanderung in Barchfeld anlangte, das weit auseinander zu beiden Seiten der Landstraße gelegene Dorf mit den freundlichen mehrstöckigen Fachwerkhäusern in Nichts unterchieden von den andern Dörfern und Flecken Thüringens, die ich bisher auf meiner Wanderung kennen gelernt. Nur mehrere Schilder auf den Häusern, deren Inschriften theils mercantile, theils handwerkliche bezeugten, ließen auf einem regeren Geschäftsverkehr, als er sonst wohl in einem Dorfe vorzukommen pflegt, schließen und gaben mir die ersten Anzeichen der Anwesenheit einer zahlreichen jüdischen Einwohnerschaft. Jetzt waren fast alle die- ser, übrigens in ihrer Ausstattung höchst einfachen Häuser, in der Barchfeld als Anknüpfung des herannahenden Sabbats, bereits geschlossen, und diese Festenandeutung machte auf mich inmitten des gerade um diese Stunde ziemlich lauten und regen ländlichen Treibens, im Geräusch der heim- lichen Kinderherden, der Karren und Getreide- fuhrwerke aller Art, so wie der dahinschweben- den Häuser bei lärmendem Spiel sich tummeln- den Dorfjungen und Kinderschar, deren Sabbat erst übermorgen begann, einen eigenthümlichen Eindruck. Mein Reisebekannte von der Leben- steiner Chaussee, den ich endlich aufgefunden, war hoch erfreut, daß ich mein Versprechen so pünktlich gehalten, und nachdem ich mich an einem frischen Trunk erquickte, und mich mit meinem Anger von dem Staube der Wanderschaft befreit hatte, mach- ten wir uns, da es inzwischen Abend geworden, gemeinsam auf den Weg zur „Schule“.

Das Synagogengebäude, welches, wie mir mein Unter- wegs erzählte, in seinem oberen Stockwerk zugleich als Wohnung für den Chazan dien- te, befand sich in einem Seitengäßchen des Dorfes zwi- schen Scheunen und Gebäuden halb versteckt und diese Lage, die man übrigens bei allen Synagogen in den kleineren Städten Deutschlands, namentlich im Süden, in ähnlicher Weise vorfindet, warf in mein Gemüth unwillkürlich den Schatten jener, mein Gottlob für immer beseitigten, finsternen Zeit des Glaubenshasses und der Verfolgungen hinein, wo die Erziehung der Juden im Schooße einer christlichen Gemeinde überhaupt und insbesondere die Ausübung ihres Gottesdienstes für ein Ver- brechen galt, das oft genug von dem durch die fromme Geistlichkeit aufgeschwungenen Volksrauschen an den Beten in ihrem Gotteshause selbst in maßlosem Vorurtheil blutig geblüht wurde. Es schien auch in der That, als wenn ein Schat- ten, eine Erinnerung wichtiger an jene Zeit der früheren Jahrhunderte, die inmitten ihrer entsef- lichen Greuel und Qualen für das Judentum dennoch das eine unschlagbare Gute bewirkte, daß alle ihre Mitglieder in unzertrennbarer Bande treu und fest zusammenstanden, daß sie sich als Glieder nicht nur einer Glaubensgenossenschaft, sondern einer einzigen Familie fühlten, die ihren Schutz und Hort gegen alle die Noth und Drangsal, die sie fortwährend gab, allein in dem Aufstod und dem unerschütterlichen Vertrauen auf den unsicht- baren Vater der Weltenschicksale fand, — es schien mir, als ob hiervon eine lebendige Erinnerung noch zurückgeblieben wäre in der Gemeinde, deren Sabbatfeier ich jetzt beobachtete. Ein einfacher, weißgewandter, nicht allzu hoher Saal mit einer engen Frauengallerie versehen, von der Decke an Eisenstäben mehrere kleine messingene Kronleuch- ter herabhängend; die vom Alter bereits tief dun- kelen Stühle und Gebetspulte der Männer, das Ackertheil ebenfalls in aller einfachster fast ärmlicher Form, einen Schrank darstellend, an den Seiten mit einem Paar hölzernen Säulen geziert, deren einfache Vergoldung ebenso wie die Farben des seitlichen Vorhanges an der Thorlade halb verblasst und unkenntlich geworden, darüber die schwarzen Tafeln, mit den weißen Anfangs- buchstaben der Zehngebote — alles das gab ein Gesamtbild, das von ergreifendem Eindruck war. Und in diesem so ärmlich ausgestatteten Gotteshause erhob sich eine auf allen Gesichtern zu lesende Begeisterung des Gottesdienstes, eine tief innerlich gefühlte Inbrunnigkeit des Gebets, wie ich sie bisher und noch dazu an einer einfachen Sabbatfeier, noch nie und nirgend gefunden. Es machte mich der Anblick, als ich sah, wie so mit ganzer Seele die gesammte kleine Gemeinde an den Lippen des Vorlesers hing (dessen Stimme leise und von besonderem Wohlklang war) und wie alle als Obor laut, doch in beitem Zusammen- hang einstimmen in die Worte und Strophen, die zu wiederholten waren, es machte mich dieser An- blick einer gottbeglückten Pöbelhülle an die Worte eines Gefanges, den ich einst bei einer jüdischen Festfeier vom Chöre singend hörte und deren Ein- druck mir unvergänglich bleiben wird. Die Stro- phen des Gefanges klangen also:

Es giebt ein heil'ges Erben
In Dir, o Herr, und bin, Der Judo's Leid und Thränen Geschaut vom Abgänger.

Wir fühlten oft uns einsam Und fremd auf Erden hier, Doch hielten wir gemeinsam In Liebe, Herr, zu Dir.

Die tiefe Wahrheit dieser Worte wurde mir hier recht klar. Einen besonders wohlthätigen Ein- druck machte aber der ganze Gottesdienst durch die große Ordnung, die darin herrschte und an der sich manche große, wehrfähige jüdische Gemein- de hätte ein Muster nehmen können. Kein Flüster- geschwätz, kein störendes Zwischenreden eines Ein- zelnen wurde hörbar, und lautlose Stille herrschte in den Pausen. In gebotener Stimmung habe ich selten ein Gotteshaus verlassen, als das un- schreibbare, von Scheunen umgebene Dorfhaus. Barchfeld's, aus dessen Fenstern der Kerkenshim- mer von den ärmlichen Bettelgampeln mir auf den Weg zu meinem freundlichen Wirth nach Hause leuchteten.

Parissa (Thessalien). — Einweihung einer Schule. — Schon lange vor der bestimmten Stunde hatte sich vor der Schule eine solche zahl- reiche Menge eingefunden, daß man den Weg für die Honoratioren frei halten mußte. Der Gou- verneur der Provinz Jauer-Palcha schickte, als Beweis seiner außerordentlichen Sympathie, um die Feier noch mehr zu erhöhen, in der Schule die Fahne Sanktalt cher, einen Gegenstand der höch- sten Verehrung bei den Türken, die zum Herrn Goldmann bewacht, war sie von den Herrn Borchard, dem französischen Consul; Borell, dem italienischen Consul; Ali-Pacha, dem Statthalter, einem Obern, einem Oberlieutenant und einem Bataillonchef umgeben. Der griechi- sche Consul wurde durch seinen Dolmetscher ver- treten; der englische entschludigte sich in einem Briefe, daß er bei der Ceremonie nicht anwesend sein könne. Die Ceremonie wurde mit einer militärischen Musikbegleitung eröffnet, welche mehrere Nationallieder spielte. Herr Bloch, Director die- ser Anstalt, hielt nun eine Rede, welche allgemei- nen Beifall hatte. Der Pacha, die Consulen versprachen ihm, nachdem sie ihn beglückwünscht hatten, die fruchtbarste Unterthänigkeit. Herr Borchard, Präsident des lokalen Committee der Alliance Israélite, hob in seiner lüftlichen Rede besonders die Wichtigkeit des Unterrichts und die dem Herrn Bloch anvertraute Mission hervor. Hierauf stimmten die Zuhörer eine türkische Kanade zu Ehren des Sultans, und eine im bekräftigten An- der der „Alliance Israélite Universelle“ an. Der Borchard, der die Ceremonie mit der Hoffnung auf den Erfolg dieses neuen Instituts schied man und man kann mit Recht erwarten, daß es der Ge- meinde Parissa's große Dienste thun wird.

Paschawitsch'schaft in Russland. — Der Gouverneur von Grobno (in Litauen) fand in einigen jüdischen Häusern Unreinlichkeiten. Alle Hausbesitzer jüdischer Confession, so- wohl Schulde als Unschuldige, haben je 10 Silberrubel Strafe gezahlt, so daß zusammen über 1500 Rubel gezahlt wurden. Die Juden verfielen nun einen Refus an den Statthalter Kaufmann, und eine jüdische Deputation von sechs Bürgern begab sich nach Wilna, um das Gesuch dem Statthalter zu überreichen. Dieser theilte die Beschwerden der Juden dem Gouver- neur von Grobno mit, welcher die Delinquenten je 25 Silberrubel und alle anderen jüdischen Haus- eigenthümer je 10 Silberrubel Strafe dafür zahlen ließ. Nach der doppelten Strafe begaben sich die Juden zu dem Minister des Innern. Dieser schickte den Refus an den Statthalter Kaufmann, der wieder an den Gouverneur von Grobno. Zum drittenmale nun haben die Hausbesitzer je 10 Silberrubel und die Delinquenten je 25 Silber- rubel Strafe zahlen müssen. Die 25 Silberrubel Juden wiederum sich nun an den Kaiser selbst und stellten ihr Verlangen in Folge des Brandes im Jahre 1865, der ihnen die Hälfte des Vermögens entziff, vor. Der Kaiser verlangte vom Gouverneur eine Erklärung darüber. Die- ser besatz nun viermal eine Strafe von je 10 und 25 Silberrubeln zu zahlen und zwang alle Bürger der Stadt, eine Adresse an ihn zu unter- schreiben, worin sie ihm für seine Wohlthaten dan- ken und ihn zum Ehrenbürger der Stadt Grobno machen. Diese Adresse sollte dem Kaiser zur Er- klärung dienen. Die Juden haben jedoch dabei den Kopf nicht verloren und begaben sich per- sönlich nach Petersburg, um zu erklären, daß sie gegungen die Adresse zu unterschreiben. Der Gouverneur hatte nämlich alle Bürger befohlen, das Gebäude und die Kanäle mit Rosen befest, eine schon fertige, von ihm selbst verfaßte Adresse zum Unterschreiben gegeben und den Widerstren- den ganz einfach mit Knuten geprügelt. Der Cor- respondent der N. Fr. Pr., der diese Probe allfä- scher Verwaltungsweltur berichtet, merkt noch nichts über den Erfolg der Deputation an den Kaiser.

Paris. — Herr Hoor, Oberabbiner von Frankreich, hat im „An. Fr.“ einen Brief ver- öffentlicht, in welchem derselbe über seine Sam- lungen zu Gunsten verschiedener wohlthätiger Zwecke Rechenschaft giebt. Wir entnehmen diesem Briefe folgende Daten: Das Committee für Je- rusalem hat von Dieren 5627 bis Dieren 5628 9633 Franken nach Jerusalem geschickt. In dem von diesem Committee in dieser Stadt gegründeten Beth-Hambdrach werden 50 Israeliten unterrich- tet; 4000—4500 Franken werden für dasselbe jährlich verausgabt. Das Committee hat bei den Pilgerwohnungen der Stadt ein Haus errich- tet, welches den Namen des verstorbenen Ma- mann, Oberabbiner von Frankreich, trägt, und welches der Witwe des Rabbinen Schwarz, als Wohnung übergeben wurde. Das Haus hat 2500 Franken gekostet. Das Committee be- ziffelt ein geeignetes Haus für das Beth-Hamb- drach zu kaufen gekostet. — Zu dem von den Israeliten des Rabbinatskreises Kolmar gegrün- deten Fond zu Gunsten der Hinterlassenen des ver- storbenen Oberabbiners Klein zu Kolmar haben die Israeliten zu Paris 12,400 Fr. beigetragen. — Für die armen Israeliten im Orient wurden mehr denn 25,000 Fr. gesammelt.

Wina, 20. Juli. — Die heilige jüdische Gemeinde hat einen schmerzlichen Verlust zu be- klagen, namentlich die Armen. Der Kaufmann Judel Apawow ist gestorben, von welchem 300 arme Familien täglich Brod um die Hälfte des Preises erhielten. In seinen Läden war der Brod- verkauf so geordnet, daß zwei Drittel Wohlthät und ein Drittel christliche Arme an dieser Wohlthat Theil nehmen konnten. Seiner Leiche folgten mehr als 2000 Menschen.

— Ein schlechter Schauspieler geriet mit einem jüdischen Schöngeld um eines Urtheils willen in Streit. Der Jude drohte, daß er ihm etwas an- thun werde, was ihm noch nicht geschah; der Schauspieler sprang auf und rief: „Was können Sie mir antun?“ Der Wigbold verließ die Ge- sellschaft, und ließ nach einer Weile den Schau- spieler vom Aufwärter heraustrufen. Dieser kam: „Sehen Sie, sagte jener, ich ließ Sie heraustrufen, das haben Sie noch nie erlebt.“

— Ein armer jüdischer Candidat der Medizin wandte sich mit einer Blutschrift an den be- kannten Wohlthäter Professor Herz um eine Unterstü- tzung, welcher aber nicht bei guter Laune war, und selbe abschlug. Als der Student davon war, sein Doc- torat zu machen, schrieb er auf seiner Dissertation die Worte: „Ein Beweis, wie zwei Menschen ohne Herz leben können.“ und überreichte selbe dem Herrn Professor Herz, der ihn, als er den Aufsatz gelesen, küßte und sich bei ihm entschuldigte.

Feuilleton.

Jane, die Juedin.

Erzählung von Philipp Salen.

(Fortsetzung.)
Auch das sehr ich. Also was ist geschehen — darf ich — darf Ihre Freundin es nicht wissen?

D. ja, liebe Jane, Sie dürfen und sollen es wissen, aber Sie müssen sich nicht beunru-higen, es betrifft Sie und mich weiter nicht.
Mit einem Wort, es ist oben ein wichtiger Besuch angekommen. Der alte Herr hat Freund mitgebracht und seinen Sohn nach der Stadt geholt. Wahrscheinlich handelt es sich um ein bedeutendes Geschäft. Auch die Mädchen sollen ihnen folgen und alle werden erst nach zwei Stunden zurückkehren, um dann gemeinschaftlich zu speisen. Jetzt steht das Haus oben ganz leer.

Aber, mein Gott, was geht denn vor? rief Jane besorgt. Es ist also wirklich nichts Gefährliches?

Reinhold lächelte auf sehr natürliche Weise und das beruhigte Jane mehr als alle seine Worte. Gewiss nicht, sagte er im freund-lichen Tone, und nach den Mienen der Männer zu schließen, ist es sogar etwas er-freuliches. Sie haben gewiss ein gutes Ge-schäft gemacht.

D. das kenne ich! erwiderte Jane. Ja, ja, die Geschäfte der Männer! Ich sehe nichts desto weniger leise aufsteigend hinzu, da sie wahrscheinlich an ähnlige Vorcom-nisse in ihrem väterlichen Hause denken mochte.

Reinhold nickte. Pöhllich raffte er sich zusammen, er mußte an die ihm bevorstehende Vorbereitung denken. Er stand vom Sopha wieder auf, trat vor Jane hin und indem er ihre Hand faßte, sagte er mit herzlichem Tone:

Liebe Jane! Ich habe eine Bitte. Ich hege den brennenden Wunsch, mit Ihnen eine recht trauliche und genussreiche Stunde zu verleben, und die Gelegenheit ist günstig dazu. Wir haben ja immer einmal einen Abend dort oben in dem reizenden Pavillon zujubringen wollen, den Sie noch nicht betreten haben, so lange Sie auch schon in diesem Haus wohnen. Dort sind wir so ganz allein und heute mehr denn je. Da können wir uns noch einmal so recht von Herzen ausprechen, bevor das schlechte Wetter und mit ihm — ach! meine endlich doch not-wendig werdende Abreise kommt. Ich habe Ihnen noch so viel zu sagen und ich würde in der Unterhaltung mit Ihnen nicht fertig werden, auch wenn wir Jahre zusammen wären. Jede Minute gehört einem neuen Gedanken, einem neuen Wunsch, denn jede Minute leben wir inniger, wärmer, wenn unsere Liebe die rechte Liebe ist.

Sie sah den also sprechenden mit er-regenden Wangen und voller Verwunderung an. Er sprach ja von ihrer Liebe, als ob sie ihm die ihrige schon gestanden hätte.

Ich verstehe Sie nicht! flüsterte sie, flammenden Augen sendend und ihm leise ihre Hand entziehend.

Oh, Sie verstehen mich nicht! Gut! Dann sollen Sie mich näher im Pavillon verstehen. Kommen Sie, erfüllen Sie diesmal meine Bitte. Schlingens sind jetzt alle nach der Stadt gefahren und wir sind oben ganz allein. Der Abend ist so wunderschön und die lachende Gegend ist von da oben so lieblich zu schauen. Auch geht heute der Mond wie eine Sichel auf, was Sie so gern sehen und wir können das Alles so recht aus der ersten Hand genießen. Nicht wahr? Aber wir müssen uns beeilen, damit uns die Däm-merung nicht unvorkommt.

Wenn Sie es wünschen, sagte sie leise, so will ich es thun, obgleich wir ja auch hier ganz ungestört wären.

D. es ist einmal so etwas ganz Neues und wir hatten es uns ja schon so lange vor-genommen.

Ja, das ist wahr. Gedulden Sie sich einen Augenblick, ich will nur ein Tuch und meinen Capuchon holen — am Abend wird es doch kühl.

Sie schlüpfte hinaus und Reinhold war allein. Er athmete tief auf und sagte sich freudig nach der Stille. Der erste Schritt war ihm so leicht gelungen, und nun hatte er das Vertrauen, daß ihm auch die folgen-den gelingen würden. Langsam und sich immer wieder von Neuem zur Ruhe ernah-mend, ging er im Saale auf und ab, aber er brauchte nicht lange zu warten. Jane kam schnell wieder zurück und er half ihr das Tuch umlegen. Das weiße wollene Kopf-tuch aber wollte sie noch nicht benutzen, es sei noch zu warm dazu, sagte sie.

Ja, das ist es. Sind Sie fertig? Gut, so gehen wir denn!

Er warf Jane merkte es wohl, einen seltsa-men Blick, den sie wieder nicht verstand, in dem kleinen Saal umher, dann trat er ihr nach in's Freie. Sie schloß die Thür und steckte den Schlüssel in die Tasche. Gleich darauf hatte sie ihren Arm in den seinen ge-legt und sie schritten nun langsam und ruhig den Berg hinan, ihrem nicht fernem Ziele zu.

Zwölftes Capitel.

Der Pavillon, nach dem wir Jane und Reinhold gehen sahen und wohin wir sie be-gleiteten wollen, war ohne Zweifel eine der anmuthigsten und sinnigsten Zierden des schönen Parks von Schillings-Lust. Er lag auf einer kleinen, hoch hervorragenden Terrasse zur Linken des Hauses und fast auf gleicher Höhe mit ihm. Leicht geschwungene schmale Wege, so daß höchstens zwei Personen neben einander gehen konnten, führten von oben und unten dahin, und er erhob sich frei über den mit Häusern und Gärten ge-schmückten Bergabhang ragend, an einer Stelle, von der man die reichste Aussicht über die Erde, die grünen Inseln und das ganze jenseits im bläulichen Nebel verschwimmende Land genießen konnte. Die Wege selbst waren zu beiden Seiten mit schönen, zierlich gewachsenen Tannen, auch mit anderen Laubbäumen eingefast und um das kleine Sommerhäuschen vor dem jäh abfallenden Abhang zu schützen, war es mit einer festen Balustrade umgeben, an deren rechter Seite eine mächtige Signalflagge sich erhob, auf der heute, was freilich Jane in ihrer Aufregung nicht bemerkte, eine große Flagge mit dem Wappen des Besizers leicht im Winde wehte. Das kleine Gebäude selbst war aus gebogenem Fachwerk gebaut und mit braungebeizten Planken bedeckt, die ein reiches Schmuckwerk verzierte. Auf dem schön ge-schwungenen und jetzt getrockneten Zin-bach diente sich eine metallene Windfahne, und von den abwärts laufenden ausgezack-ten Enden derselben hingen vergoldete Quasten von künstlich geschnittenem Eichenholz herab.

Mis Reinhold und Jane das kleine Plateau erreicht hatten, lehnten sie sich gegen die Balustrade und schauten, um ihren be-wegten Athem zur Ruhe kommen zu lassen, schweigend über die wunderbar schöne Gegend hin, über die jetzt die Abenddämmerung schnell herabzusinken begann. Der Platz war um diese Zeit wenig belebt und bei der herrschenden Windstille lag er wie eine spiegelglatte riesige Schlange da, die, von Hamburg sich herwindend, links einen mächtigen Vogel besaß, zur rechten aber in eine ziemlich regelmäßig geradeten Kasse der See entgegenstrebte. Still und friedlich lagen die vielen Häuser und Häuserchen zu den beiden Seiten der aufmerksamen Schaulustigen, und auch das das Dach des kleinen Hauses, in welchem Jane bisher gewohnt, konnte man von hieraus deutlich erkennen. Hier und da tauchte schon ein heller Lichtschein in den Häusern auf, aber kein Geräusch drang von ihnen nach der stillen beträchtlichen Höhe empor. Ueberaus lieblich und fast feierlich dehnte sich rings das matteblau Himmel nach dem andern sichtbar wurde; von Osten her aber, etwas tief am Himmel stehend, stieg die kleine Mondkugel herauf und schwannte wie ein goldener Kahn in dem reinen Ae-thermeer.

Da haben wir ihn! begann Reinhold das Gespräch. Sehen Sie, ich habe es Ihnen ja vorhergesagt. Und da — da spiegelt er sich schon in dem silbernen Wasser ab — ist das nicht schön, Jane?

Wunderbar schön, ja! D. mein Gott, wie friedlich, gleich einem schlummernden Kinde, liegt die große Welt da, und doch, wie viele Sorgen schlafen da unten in den stillen Häusern!

Lassen Sie uns jetzt nicht an die Sorgen dieser Welt denken, ver setzte Reinhold lie-blich, wir selbst wollen sie einmal völlig for-los betrachten.

Ja, das thue ich gern, ich möchte es we-nigstens, zumals es so selten vorkommt.

Ja, Sie haben Recht, es kommt selten vor, aber bisweilen kommt es doch, zum Beispiel heute. Wir ist in diesem Augen-blick unendlich leicht um's Herz, und dabei ist dies Herz so voller Liebe und Sehnsucht zu und nach Allem, was ich sehe, daß ich die ganze Welt an meine Brust reisen und sie in inniger Umarmung umschlingen möchte.

Jane hörte diese Worte mit klopfendem Herzen an und sie wagte einen scheuen Blick nach dem Gesicht ihres Freundes, das in seinem Mienen, so weit sie dieselben noch erken-nen konnte, das Gefühl wirklich ausdrückte, welches er eben zu schildern versuchte. Aber sie erwiderte keine Sylbe darauf.

Es wird kühl, fuhr Reinhold fort, als plötzlich ein frischer Windzug die Flagge auf dem Flaggenstock an seiner Seite anscheinend flattern ließ, wir wollen lieber hineingehen. Ich habe den Schlüssel zu mir gefastet.

— sehen Sie, hier ist er schon.

Jane blickte nach dem Schlüssel, den er ihr hinhielt, und nickte zustimmend. Reinhold öffnete die Thür und ließ sie weit auf.

Treten Sie ein, sagte er, Sie sehen, hier sind wir ganz ungestört.

Jane stand schon auf der Schwelle, aber da zögerte sie einen Augenblick. In dem eingeschlossenen Räume, war es viel dunkler als draußen und man konnte kaum noch einen der vielen Gegenstände darin erkennen.

Es ist hier fast zu dunkel, sagte sie lang-sam, wollen wir nicht lieber im Freien bleiben?

D. nein, ver setzte er, treten Sie dreist hinein. Für das nötige Licht ist reichlich geforgt.

Bei diesen Worten zog er die ängstlich verwundene Jane an der Hand in die Mitte des ziemlich geräumigen Gemachs und so-gleich schloß er hinter ihr die Thür. Aber Jane's Bepörnung hielt nicht lange dauern.
Reinhold zog ein Feuerzeug aus der Tasche, zündete ein Holzchen an und bald darauf brannten drei starke Wachskerzen hell und freudig, die auf einer Ansel von rothem Nubingleder standen und auf der Stelle den ganzen inneren Raum genugsam beleuchteten.

Sehen Sie sich nur recht gemächlich hier um, fuhr Reinhold ermunternd fort, unterdessen lasse ich die Jalousien herab. So.
Sie bewegen sich leicht in Ihren Rollen, der Dauher und sein guter Dämmstoff haben hier für Alles geforgt.

Zwei Minuten später waren alle fünf Jalousien herabgelassen und beide Personen, von aller Welt abgeschnitten, befanden sich in der That in einem allerliebsten ein-geräumten kleinen runden Salon. An der Hinterwand stand ein breites und langes Huhbecken, mit leberbrogeligen Porzellan aus-gestattet. Darüber hing ein Spiegel mit reichem Goldrahmen und über diesem das ziemlich große Modell des bekannten englischen Riesenkreuzes, "Great Eastern". Neben dem Sopha und zwischen den Fenstern stand der bequeme Sessel, davor ein runder Tisch, mit einer braunen Marmorplatte bedeckt.

SAPOLINE FRAGRANT SAPOLINE TOOTH PASTE

Dr. Spencer's Fragrant Sapoline, ein rein vegetabilisches Präparat für die Zähne.

Es besteht aus den besten und ausgefeiltesten Stoffen des Pflanzenreichs und ist von unbere-barten Werthe für die Erhaltung, Gesundheit und Schönheit der Zähne und des Zahnfleisches. Die Wichtigkeit, schöne Zähne zu besitzen, wird allgemein von denen anerkannt, die den wahren Werth auf persönliche Vorzüge legen. Der Verfall der Zähne entspringt aus verschiedenen Ursachen, hauptsächlich mag derselbe aber der frühzeitigen Vernachlässigung, Krankheit oder dem Gebrauch von Zahnpulvern, welche Mineralien oder andere schädliche Substanzen enthalten und den Zähnen eine momentane Weiße geben, die jedoch aber gleichzeitig angreifen, zuzuführen sein.

Es reinigt und erhält die Zähne, verhindert Zahnfleisch- und Kauln, entfernt Weinschwärze, Amalgam und alle widerlichen Sub-stanzen, giebt ein angenehmes und erfrischendes Gefühl im Munde, beseitigt den unangenehmen Geruch, den verdorbenen Zähne, der Gebrauch von Tabak und ein verdorbenen Magen verursachen, und wird dadurch zu einem so wünschenswerthen Toiletteartikel, daß es bei Kindern und Erwachsenen täglich in Gebrauch kommen wird, ein Verfahren, das sich für Erhaltung der Zähne und die Gesundheit des Gaumens als sehr heilsam erweisen wird.

Die Eigentümer dieses Präparats garantiren, daß die Fähigkeit derselben, die Zähne und das Zahnfleisch zu erhalten und zu verfeinern, alles was dem Publikum jemals in dieser Hinsicht ge-boten worden ist, übertrifft, während die sofortige allgemeine Nachfrage ein Zeichen der Anerkennung der Vorzüge desselben ist.

Zu verkaufen bei allen Druggisten und Händlern.

JOHN STOCKY,

An den Seiten sah man noch mehrere kleineere Lische mit großen und kleinen Fernrohren beladen, und unter dem Sopha in zierlichen Behältern lagen, fest in Bündel zu-sammengeschüttelt, die verschiedenen Flaggen, die, wie die Zeiten und Verhältnisse es nöthig erscheinen ließen, auf den nahe stehenden Flaggenstock gezogen wurden.

Jane schaute sich noch immer bewundernd in dem kleinen Räume um, als Reinhold schon lange mit der Schließung der Jalousien fertig war, und aus ihren Augen leuchtete dabei die reinste Freude, nachdem ihre Befürchtung wegen der vorherigen Dunkelheit völlig geschwunden war.

Nun, begann Reinhold wieder zu sprecheist das nicht hübsch? Ich denke doch. Jetzt aber wollen wir uns setzen und der Weinung sein, wir seien zu Hause, denn unser guter

Wirth hat es verstanden, auch in seiner Abwesenheit seinen Gästen Alles bequem und genügsam zu machen.

Ja, es ist sehr hübsch hier, ich finde es auch. O, welche köstlicher Beiz ist doch dies Schillingen-Lust! Ob die Glücklichen, die es bewohnen, auch ihr Glück so recht zu schätzen wollen?

Du allen Zweifel. Wie sollten sie nicht! Aber noch mehr muß den Besizer der Genuß desselben erfreuen, wenn er bedenkt, daß er dies Alles den Anstrengungen seines Kopfes und der Arbeit seiner Hände verdankt nicht wahr? — setzen Sie sich nur dreist nicht neben mich, obgleich dieser bequeme Sitz viel geräumiger als unsere schmale Bank unter der Pappel ist. Nehmen Sie auch nicht Ihr Glas so eng zusammen. So. Auch ihre Hand können Sie mir heute geben — wir wollen ja so recht traulich und vertrautlich plaudern, nicht wahr?

Jane antwortete nicht, aber sie ließ ihm ihre Hand, die er ergriffen, und machte keine Miene, sie ihm zu entziehen, als er sich niederbeugte und einen herzlichen Kuß darauf drückte.

O, liebe Jane, fuhr er fort, ja, so, Hand in Hand, Auge in Auge, wollen wir recht traulich plaudern. Ach, wie das schön ist und wie es so wonnig mein ganzes Herz durchschauert! Wissen Sie wohl noch, wie wir uns zum ersten Mal im jüdischen Tempel saßen — o, wissen Sie es noch?

Jane nickte leise mit dem Kopfe. Ob ich es weiß! flüsterte sie. Ich denke alle Tage daran!

Ich auch. Nach jenem unvergeßlichen Tage aber kam eine trübe Zeit — Welche?

Da ich Sie suchte und nicht finden konnte —

Aber endlich fanden Sie mich doch — Margarethe führte Sie auf die rechte Spur.

Ja freilich. Aber gleich darauf kamen wieder sehr traurige Tage — Welche denn?

Als Sie krank wurden —

O nein, die waren für mich nicht traurig.

Sie waren ja mein Arzt — Freilich, so glücklich war ich. Allein vergessen Sie nicht meine Sorge um ihr Ver-ben —

Wie könnte ich! Ich vergesse auch nicht meinen Dank!

Reinhold schweig; er wollte nichts sagen, was sie betrübten könnte, und doch hatte er gern schon längst einen süßen Dank von ihm gehabt.

Nun, fuhr er endlich lebhafter fort, die

Krankheit wurde glücklich überwunden, und dann, was kam dann?

Unsere Bekanntschaft rückte schnell weiter vor —

Und wurde zur Freundschaft — ach ja!

Das war recht schön; wenn Sie damals nur nicht so schnell abgereist wären und mich in der größten Sorge zurückgelassen hätten.

Aber halt, da fällt mir Etwas ein. Haben

Sie denn schon eine Antwort auf Ihren

Brief von Jenny Davidson aus Gothenburg erhalten?

Jane, so unerwartet an diesen Brief er innert, erschraf so heftig, daß ihre Hand in Reinhold's Hand zitterte.

Was ist Ihnen? warum zittern Sie so? fragte er unbefangen.

Sie richtete ihr Auge fest auf sein Gesicht und durchforschte es scharf. Ein seltsamer Verdacht war plötzlich in ihr aufgestiegen.

Woher wissen Sie etwas von diesem Brief?

fragte sie rasch.

Das ist ganz einfach, liebe Jane. Als ich an jenem Morgen vor Ihr Haus kam und schelte, da Niemand sichtbar war, kam Rebecca die Treppe herunter, mit zwei Briefen in der Hand. Der eine war an mich gericht-et und enthielt jenen traurigen Abschiedsgruß; den andern wollte sie auf die Post tragen. Ich nahm ihr den Gang ab und so las ich die Adresse. Ist das nicht ganz einfach?

O ja, das wußte ich bisher noch nicht, erwiderte sie mit nachdenklicher Miene.

Aber warum sehen Sie so bedächtig dabei aus, als wäre es Ihnen nicht ganz recht?

Jane überlegte ihre Antwort; endlich sagte sie mit zunehmender Bestimmtheit:

Sie kennen den Inhalt dieses Briefes doch nicht?

Wie sollte ich! Er war ja fest verschlossen.

Und wenn er es auch nicht gewesen wäre, ich würde ihn doch nicht gelesen haben.

Jane's Bestimmtheit legte sich jedoch nicht in Folge dieser Erklärung. Ihr Ver-dacht war einmal rege geworden und, sie wußte selbst nicht warum, er wurde sogar noch stärker und ihr Gesicht nahm den Aus-druck einer unbefriedigten Angst an.

Sie haben ihn also wirklich nicht gelesen?

fragte sie lebhaft errotend.

Auf mein Wort, nein! Gehehen aber will ich, daß ich sehr begierig war, seinen Inhalt zu kennen, und wenn ich aufrichtig sein soll — ich bin es noch jetzt.

Was sind Sie? fragte sie leise, kam ihre Verlegenheit beherzigend.

Reinhold lächelte, als wüßte er sich über ihre Zerknirschtheit. Ich bin sehr begierig, zu wissen, was in dem Briefe stand, wider-holte er. Und da wir gerade davon sprechen, und ich diesmal so selbst am neugierig bin, so sagen Sie es mir.

Jane schaute verwirrt vor sich nieder und wagte nicht, ihren Blick zu dem Gesicht des sie so heftig Bedrückenden zu erheben. Das geht nicht, sprach sie leise.

Warum geht es nicht?

Jenny ist meine vertraueste Freundin — ich habe im Leben nur diese eine gehabt.

Ihr allein konnte ich Alles sagen, was ich Niemandem sonst sagen kann.

Auch Ihren neuen Freund, auch mir

nicht?

Auch Ihnen nicht — Ihnen sogar am allerwenigsten.

Das setzt mich in Erstaunen! rief Reinhold nach einiger Zeit ersten Nachdenkens.

Nun haben Sie mich erst recht neugierig gemacht. — Sagen Sie, fuhr er plötzlich viel lebhafter fort, haben Sie ihrer vertrauesten

Freundin auch von der Existenz ihres neuen Freundes etwas vertraut?

Jane senkte den Kopf noch tiefer auf ihre Brust und kaum war das „Ja“ vernommen welches sie gleichsam wider Willen über ihre Lippen schlüpfen ließ.

Also Sie haben zu ihr von mir gesprochen.

Das konnte ich mir fast denken, es war ja

THE LATEST IMPROVEMENT IN DENTISTRY.

Patented December 3d, 1867, by DR.
G. W. COOL. The right of San Francisco reserved for his own use. The nature of his improvement consists in lining the entire concave surface with fine gold; it makes the plate twice as strong and one-third thinner than the common vulcanite plate. This work has given satisfaction in every case. Please call at No. 14 Third street, near Market, and see specimens. All work warranted as fine as the specimens. Prices reasonable.
